We have finished another year at the Journal of Oral Research, a year marked by changes, challenges, but also by growth. This year saw a redesign of the editorial team, and we are thankful for the support we have received from our readers, authors, reviewers and editorial board members, who continued supported us through the changes the journal underwent this year. As an editorial team we strive to serve and publish in a manner that is the most ethic and efficient. As such we have attended workshops regarding good editorial practices, including the importance of open science, a concept of utmost important at JOR, while having the best interests of authors, readers and of all the individuals who are key contributors to the journal, such as the editorial board members and the ad-hoc reviewers.

Lastly but crucially, we are grateful to the continuous support of the Facultad de Odontología, at the Universidad de Concepción, who single-handedly has funded the journal historically, including this past year. Without the good will and constant encouragement of the leaders of the Facultad, the Journal of Oral Research would not be able to exist and operate as it does, free of charge for both readers and authors.

Acknowledgment of Editorial Board Members

We take this opportunity to thank the members of our editorial board who make the continuous existence of the Journal of Oral Research possible.

Acknowledgment of Reviewers

The success of our journal critically depends on the generous time and work volunteered by our reviewers.

The editorial team of the Journal of Oral Research would like to acknowledge the great efforts of all the referees who contributed to the Journal during this past year. We would like to hereby express our sincere appreciation for their dedication in maintaining the Journal's clinical relevance and scientific rigor. The reviewers are one of the fundamental cornerstones of a scientific journal's structure, and without them we would cease to exist.
